Recent Decision On Various Aspects Of Privilege

Clyde & Co

There are several grounds on which a party in English legal proceedings can claim to be entitled to withhold the production of material in its possession to the other side.
Settlement Of Disputes: Look Before You Leap...

Goodman Derrick LLP

The facts of the case are straightforward: Mr Hayward injured his back at work and his claim for damages was settled by agreement with his employer's insurance company who made a payment to him.

Refusing To Engage In Alternative Dispute Resolution Becomes Harder To Justify

Reed Smith

The English courts are getting tougher on parties that refuse to participate in alternative dispute resolution (ADR), the most common form of which is mediation.
'Let Us Never Negotiate Out Of Fear...' – Changes In Rules Governing Offers In Litigation

Withers LLP

JFK famously said 'Let us never negotiate out of fear. But let us never fear to negotiate.'

Lawyers' Liability Briefing - Summer 2015

Clyde & Co

The current climate for claims against law firms is not one where we are seeing elevated numbers of claims, but it is very notable that there has been an increase in complex claims and in the amounts claimants are seeking to recover.

Court Rules That A Side Letter Is An Unenforceable Agreement

Clyde & Co

The Court of Appeal recently had to consider whether a side letter, drafted in parallel to a binding contract, and whose purpose was to confirm the parties' agreement to enter, at a later date, into a separate secondary agreement, was itself legally binding.

Arbitrators And Anti-Suit Awards

Clyde & Co

A recent decision from the Court of Justice of the European Union ("CJEU") has shed some light on the continuing problem of whether anti-suit injunctions can be issued to restrain the breach of an arbitration agreement.
